Subject: 33% water conservation

To whom it may concern:

I understand that the State Water Resources Control Board is considering a 33% water conservation mandate for San Juan Water District. Personally, my household has more than met the current state water mandate. We were happy to comply and amazed how much water can be saved by just paying attention. However, given the storms we have experienced so far this year, the snowpack in the Sierras, and recurrent storms in the forecasts, isn't it foolishly early to decide on the percentage we should be asked to conserve? Your 33% seems arbitrary to me. Reevaluate this issue in April when you will have a better indication of what will be needed. Come on, use some common sense!
