1. ILRP (Indian Labour Rights Program) is a program designed to empower communities in India by ensuring fair labor practices and rights. It provides training and education to workers, monitors labor conditions, and advocates for better working conditions. The program aims to reduce workers' vulnerability to exploitation and to promote social and economic justice for all.

2. The program involves various activities such as awareness campaigns, skill development workshops, and legal aid to workers. It collaborates with government agencies, trade unions, and other civil society organizations to achieve its objectives.

3. The ILRP website provides detailed information about the program, its activities, and how to get involved. It also links to resources and tools for workers to assert their rights and report labor violations. The website is an essential resource for workers seeking support and information on labor rights in India.
